cally.—For the Centigrade and Fahrenheit scales and their interrelations, see under these heads and also p 1208. In the Réaumur scale, still largely used in Russia and Germany, the freezing-point is marked zero, and the space between this and boiling-point is divided into 80 degrees. To reduce it to Fahrenheit, multiply by $\frac{9}{5}$ and add 32; to Centigrade, increase the number by one-fourth of itself. Thus: $F = \frac{9}{5} C + 32 = \frac{9}{5} R + 32$; $C = \frac{5}{9} (F - 32)$; $R = \frac{4}{9} (F - 32) = \frac{4}{9} C$. Maximum thermometer, one that registers the maximum temperature to which it is exposed; Minimum thermometer, one that registers the minimum temperature to which it is exposed. The above specimen lines show the usual bodies used in the texts of books, and newspapers; (1) being set in Great Primer, (2) in English, (3) in Pica, (4) in Small Pica, (5) in Long Primer, (6) in Bourgeois, (7) in Brevier, (8) in Minion, (9) in Nonpareil, (10) in Pearl, and (11) in Diamond.

The black squares represent the square of the body of the type, one of the units of measurement; this unit is called an em, the letter in being exactly square.

The standard unit of measurement is the Pica; but this varies in width with different British type-founders and (except Nonpareil) other bodies bear no fixed fractional relationship to Pica, as in the modern American Point System where the 'point' = $\frac{1}{16}$ Pica or $\frac{1}{24}$ inch, and the type bodies are all multiples of the point. On the Continent the point is $\frac{1}{12}$ of a Cicero, a body between Pica and English. Differences in width render type 'fat' or 'lean', or if strongly marked, 'extended' or 'condensed.' The standard height of a type—or 'height to paper'—in Britain and U.S.A. is $\frac{1}{16}$ inch.

The following is a list of type bodies, with their nearest equivalents in points, and the number of lines to the foot of the respective bodies as made in actual metal types (Messrs Miller and Richards standard).

Great Primer (18 pts.)	512	Brevier (8 pts.)	111
English (14 pts.)	64	Minion (7 pts.)	122
Pica (12 pts.)	72	Nonpareil (6 pts.)	144
Small Pica (11 pts.)	83	Pearl (5 pts.)	178
Long Primer (10 pts.)	89	Diamond (4½ pts.)	207
Bourgeois (9 pts.)	102½

A 'font' of type is an indefinite quantity having all the proper proportions of 'sorts,' including capitals and small capitals, lower-case, spaces, points and references, figures, accents, hyphens, ligatures (fi, fl, ff), &c. The proportion of letters ranges from 200's to 22,000's. The smaller letters are called lower-case, from the case in which the compositor has them arranged; the capitals and small capitals being in a different or upper case.
